

When Brent Dixon was a kid, he wanted to be a tractor. That didn't work out, and now he's a designer, educator, musician, and doodler.

Last year he logged over 85,000 miles helping organizations turn The Filene Research Institute's young adult research into successful outreach initiatives. Brent founded The Habdash, a Texas-based design consultancy, and The Cooperative Trust, a grassroots network of hundreds of young people fighting for the future of socially responsible finance.

His work is driven by a fascination for what makes people tick.

